I should like to thank:

- David Brazil, my advisory editor, whose work at Birmingham University inspired the development of this material. It has been necessary, however, to simplify his description of the system of intonation and to make some adaptations in presenting it here for teaching purposes. I take full responsibility for these simplifications and adaptations.
- The many students who have worked with the material in its various stages of development.
- The teachers and institutions who worked with the pilot edition and whose comments were so valuable in the production of the final edition.
- Studio AVP for producing the recordings, which are central to the course.
- The Phonetics Department at the School of Oriental and African Studies, London University, for assistance in obtaining the intonation contour displays.
- My family and close friends for their support and enthusiasm throughout.
- Finally, my editors, Christine Cairns and Jeanne McCarten, and Alison Silver, who edited the typescript.
